E. CHAS. ELWOOD,

Plaintiff,

vs.

JOHN H. MUSTARD, FRED AYER, and S. W.
TAGGART,

Defendants.

Amended Complaint.

Comes now the plaintiff above named, and by leave of Court first had and obtained, files this his amended complaint and alleges:—

I.

That the said plaintiff and defendants are members of that certain voluntary unincorporated club or society organized and existing in the City of Nome, Alaska, known as the “Eni,” which is closed to all except members, all of whom have keys thereto.

II.

That said club or society has been in existence for more than four years last past, and was organized in good faith for social and literary purposes and not for profit, and not with any intent to circumvent or violate any of the laws of the District of Alaska.

III.

That the defendants above named are the principal officers and managers of said club and are known as the [3] “Council of Chiefs.”

IV.

That said club owns and maintains a club house in said city, adequately furnished as a reading room, dining room, billiard and pool room, also a kitchen and buffet or bar of the value of about fifteen thousand dollars, and known as the "Log Cabin" or "Eni," and said club is known as the "Eni" or "Log Cabin Club."

V.

That the title to said building stands in the name of three trustees, who are members and who hold said title in trust for the use and benefit of the members of said club; and that all other property, including furniture, fixtures and stock has been purchased by the managers of said club in the name of the club and paid for out of the common funds of said club.

VI.

That said club, through said managers, conducts said club house, and said managers have full supervision and control of the same and of said club.

VII.

That the monthly expenses of said club are about one thousand dollars per month; that the receipts of said club, from all sources, do not materially exceed said expenses, and have not to date exceeded said expenses by more than eighty dollars.

VIII.

That said buffet or bar is stocked with whiskey, beer, wines and other intoxicating liquors and cigars, and with a [4] bar and other facilities for serving and drinking the said liquor upon the said premises; that said stock is purchased, from time to time, with the general funds of said club, under the direction of said managers; that said funds are derived from initiation fees, dues, voluntary subscriptions and the proceeds of the sale of coupon books, sold at five dollars each, each coupon therein representing one-fortieth of the cost of said book, or twelve and one-half cents, and each of said coupons entitling the holder thereof to a delivery to him in said club for his own use of victuals, intoxicating liquor to be drunk upon the premises, or cigars in such quantities as such member may desire not exceeding four gallons of such liquors at any one time, at such value as said managers shall have previously and from time to time determined; and such intoxicating liquors are so delivered to such member in exchange for said coupons and are drunk upon said premises; that such exchange value of said intoxicating liquors, as so fixed by said managers, is the usual retail price of such liquor in said City of Nome, except in the case of mixed drinks such as cocktails and stirabouts, in which case it is less than said usual price.

IX.

That no intoxicating liquors or meals are served otherwise than in exchange for the coupons above mentioned, except board of mess boarders who pay therefor by the month.

X.

That said managers employ on reasonable salary and wages paid, a Secretary, who is a member of said club, a steward and cook and other necessary help.

XI.

That nonresidents may become guests of said club, but guests are not permitted to exchange or pay for any liquor or intoxicating drinks.

XII.

That the monies derived, as aforesaid, have at all times been placed in the general treasury of the club, and are used to pay the current expenses of the club, including the replenishing, from time to time, the said stock of victuals, liquors, cigars, etc.

XIII.

That said club has at all times paid the United States Internal Revenue Tax or License required for the retail sale of intoxicating liquors, but has not had nor has it now any other license, and has not, except as hereinafter mentioned, at any time been required by any officer of the Government to pay for or take out any other license, although barroom licenses have been heretofore and are now granted to corporations and partnerships under Sections 2571 to 2577, both inclusive, of the Compiled Laws of the Territory of Alaska.

XIV.

That said club and its officers have recently been notified by the United States District Attorney for the Second Division of the District of Alaska, that they are required to and must take out a barroom license or cease to handle intoxicating liquors in the manner hereinbefore stated or to sell the same, whether to its said members or any other person.

XV.

That said officers, the managers of said club aforesaid [6] under the direction and authority of a majority of the members of said club have signified their refusal to take out said license, and threaten to continue, and do now continue to furnish and deliver intoxicating liquors in the manner aforesaid without any license therefor, and unless restrained from so doing by the injunction of this court will continue to do so, thereby as the agents of plaintiff and other members of said club subjecting plaintiff and the members of said club to fines and penalties and loss of his or their membership in said club, and their property interest therein, as well as loss of their good name and reputation, to their irreparable injury, loss and damage.

XVI.

That plaintiff has no plain, speedy or adequate remedy at law for the threatened injuries aforesaid.

XVII.

That plaintiff brings this action in his own behalf, and in behalf of a large number of the members of said club similarly situated, for the purposes hereinafter prayed for, and in order to prevent a multiplicity of suits, although plaintiff admits and alleges that an unknown number, and more than a majority of the members of said club, sustain, uphold and support the said defendants, managers as aforesaid, in their refusal to apply for or to take out a retail bar-room license, and in their continued furnishing intoxicating liquors to the members of said club in the manner aforesaid.

XVIII.

That the total number of resident members of [7] said club does not exceed seventy-five, and nonresident members a less number.

WHEREFORE, plaintiff prays that the said officers of said club, their servants, employees and agents, be enjoined and restrained from continuing the said furnishing or delivery to its members of intoxicating liquors in the form and manner aforesaid, or to sell intoxicating liquors without having first obtained a license so to do; for his costs and disbursements herein; and for such other and further relief as to the Court may seem just and proper.

Defendants.

I am of the opinion that the Demurrer to the Amended Complaint should be overruled and the prayer of the complaint granted.

In lieu of a written of a written opinion in the case the Court adopts the Brief of Counsel for the Government appearing as amici curiae as its opinion and directs that it be so filed.

May 23/1914.

J. R. TUCKER,
Judge.

Upon the general proposition as to whether or not the method of distributing liquors to the club members is a sale &c. I think the brief of argument by Atys. for the Government accepts and announces the better opinion of the conflicting decisions of the Courts; upon the statutory phase of the question to my the brief of counsel for the Government is conclusive. E. CHAS. ELWOOD,

Plaintiff,

vs.

JOHN H. MUSTARD, FRED AYER, and S. W.
TAGGART,

Defendants,

.Brief of United States Attorney as Amicus Curiae.

This action is brought by the plaintiff on behalf of himself and a minority of the members of the "Eni" or "Log Cabin Club," for the purpose of testing the right of said club to furnish intoxicating liquors to its members, without first having applied for and secured a barroom license to sell intoxicating liquors at retail. The facts are stated in the amended complaint and are admitted by the demurrer thereto.

Conceding the Courts jurisdiction of the subject matter of this action, there are but two questions to be decided:

FIRST: Do the transactions complained of constitute SALES of intoxicating liquors; and SECOND: If such transactions do constitute SALES, [14] then, do such SALES by said "Eni" club without first having secured a barroom license constitute a violation of Section 2581 of the Compiled Laws of the Territory of Alaska?

We will consider these questions in their order, but will state the first a little more broadly thus:

AN UNINCORPORATED SOCIAL CLUB ORGANIZED FOR THE ENTERTAINMENT AND PLEASURE OF ITS MEMBERS PURCHASES INTOXICATING LIQUORS WITH THE COMMON FUNDS OF THE CLUB AND DISPENSES THE SAME TO ITS MEMBERS AND GUESTS TO BE DRUNK UPON THE PREMISES, CHARGING THEREFORE A PRICE PER DRINK, OR BOTTLE, FIXED BY THE GOVERNING POWERS OF THE CLUB. IS SUCH A TRANSACTION A SALE WITHIN THE MEANING OF THE LICENSE LAWS OF THE TERRITORY?

The Compiled Laws of 1913, provide:

Section 2571: "That no person, corporation or company shall sell, offer for sale, or keep for sale, traffic in, barter, or exchange for goods in said District of Alaska, any intoxicating liquors, except as hereinafter provided * * * . Wherever the term 'intoxicating liquors' is used in this Act, it shall be deemed to include whiskey, brandy, rum, gin, wine, ale, porter, beer, hoochinoo, and all spirituous, vinous, malt, and other fermented or distilled liquors."

Section 2577: "That the liquor licenses authorized and provided by this Act shall be of two classes, namely, wholesale and barroom. * * * That a retail or barroom license shall be required for every hotel, tavern, boat, barroom, or other place in which intoxicating liquors are sold at retail * * * That every place where distilled, malt, or fermented wines, liquors, or cordials are sold in quantities as prescribed for retail dealers by section thirty-two hundred and forty-four of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to be drunk upon the premises, shall be regarded as a barroom, and the possession of malt, distilled, fermented, or any other intoxicating liquors with the means and appliances for carrying on the business of dispensing the same to br drunk where sold, shall be prima facie evidence of a barroom within the meaning of the Act, and the license therefore shall be known as a barroom license

* * * .”

The Act above set out is so plain and unambiguous that it would appear to come within the class of laws which the courts say “need no interpretation.” [15]

There is, however, an irreconcilable conflict of authority in the construction of similar statutes, or rather in the construction of the license laws of the various states as applied to such associations or clubs. Many of the decisions upholding the right of such clubs to dispense liquors to their members without the payment of the license required for retail dealers are based upon the particular wordings of the statutes construed, and one, the Pennsylvania case hereinafter cited, gave serious consideration to the fact that the club had been in existence for many years, a fact well known to the legislature, and that the legislature had not seen fit to bring it strictly within the terms of the statute. In order words, that the state was estopped, for the reasons stated, from demanding the payment of a retail license by the club. This reasoning does not appeal to other courts which have reviewed this decision, as I shall hereinafter show. But in all of the decisions favorable to the clubs, I think it safe to say that not one is based upon a statute as plain in terms as that of the law we are now discussing. Even under the statutes in most of the cases mentioned the decisions appear to me to be “strained.”

It is also worthy of note that in nearly all of the states in which decisions have been rendered in favor of the right of clubs and associations to sell liquors or “dispense” them to members without the payment of a license, the statutes have been subsequently amended bringing such clubs specifically within the terms of the statute and made so plain that no court can misconstrue them.

It would serve no useful purpose to review these decisions in detail. In the few cases which do not turn wholly upon the construction of the statutes the argument [16] is made that the dispensing of liquors to the members of such associations do not constitute a “sale” within the meaning of the license laws. That the liquor is the common property of the members, bought with the common funds of the club, and that the dispensing of the same to the members is only a means of distributing the common property among the owners. In other words, that the individual member in taking the liquor is only segregating his own property from the common mass, although he pays into the common fund the full value of all he so extracts.

Among the more recent, and which may be called the leading, cases that take this view are—

- Tennessee Club v. Dwyer, 11 La. 452 (47 Am. R. 298);
State v. Austin Club, 89 Tex. 20 (30 L. R. A. 500);
Piedmont Club v. Com., 87 Va. 540;
State ex rel Bell, v. St. Louis Club, 125 Mo. 308 (26 L. R. A. 573);
Com. v. Pomphret, 137 Mass. 564;
People v. Adelpia Club, 149 N. Y. 5 (31 L. R. A. 510);
Klein v. Livingston Club, 117 Pa. 224 (34 L. R. A. 94);
Cuzner v. California Club, 155 Cal. 303 (20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1095).

On the other hand there are many courts that are not impressed with the specious reasoning of the cases cited, and hold as does the Supreme Court of Maryland in State v. Easton Social Club, 73 Md. 97 (10 L. R. A. 64),—"that there is no occasion to be astute and to indulge in questionable refinements in order to relieve these corporations of the just consequences of their acts, or to endeavor by artificial or fictitious reasonings to permit persons in combination to do what individuals without combination could not do."

Among the State cases so holding are:—

- People v. Soule*, 74 Mich. 250 (2 L. R. A. 494);
State v. Easton Social Club, 73 Md. 97 (10 L. R. A. 64);
State v. Mudie, 22 S. D. 41 (115 N. W. 107);
Martin v. State, 59 Ala. 34;

Beauvoir Club v. State, 148 Ala. 643 (42 So. 1040);

Marmont v. State, 48 Ind. 21;

State v. Mercer, 32 Iowa, 405;

State v. Lochyear, 95 N. C. 633 (59 Am. Rep. 287);

State v. Horacek, 41 Kansas, 87 (21 Pac. 204);

State v. Boston Club, 45 La. Ann. 585 (20 L. R. A. 185);

Mohrman v. State, 105 Ga. 709 (43 L. R. A. 398);

State v. Minnesota Club, 106 Minn. 515 (20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1101);

Spokane v. Bangham, 54 Wash. 315 (103 P. 14);

State v. Kline, 50 Ore. 426; [17]

South Shore Country Club v. People, 228 Ill. 75 (12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 519;

People v. Law & Order Club, 203 Ill. 127 (62 L. R. A. 884);

Manning v. Canyon City, 45 Colo. 571 (101 Pac. 978);

Ada County v. Boise Commercial Club, 118 Pac. 1086;

State v. Neis, (N. C.) 12 L. R. A. 412.

The courts seem to be unanimous in holding that when clubs are organized for the purpose of evading the license laws or against the provisions of the local option laws, and dispense liquors, purchased with the common funds, to the members at a fixed price per drink or bottle, such a transaction constitutes a "sale" within the meaning of those laws. See cases cited in note to South Shore Country Club v. People, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 519.

We confess that we are unable to follow the reasonings of those courts that hold that the same transaction constitutes a "sale" or does not constitute a "sale," depending upon the purposes for which the club exists, or whether a license law is being construed, or a local option law which prohibits any sale within a prescribed territory; the question being in each case what acts constitute a "sale," not what the purpose and design of the "sale" may be.

The above cited case, South Shore Country Club v. People, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 519, was very carefully considered by the Supreme Court of Illinois. The defendant club was a corporation, not for pecuniary profit, but for the pleasure and social recreation of its members—one of the usual high class clubs found in the cities. The sale of liquors to its members was purely incidental to the objects and purposes of the club, the same as the furnishing of meals etc., but the members were charged for liquors the same as for meals "and for the services of caddies, boatmen and teachers and for horses, golf supplies, and special services" The club held a United States retail liquor dealers license, but the plea averred that it was secured [18] "inadvisedly and was not necessary."

The Court speaking through Mr. Justice Cortwright, says:

"The right to engage in the business of selling intoxicating liquors by retail is not now a common right, and can be exercised only in the manner and upon the terms which the statute prescribes. People ex rel. Morrison v. Cregier, 138 Ill. 401, 28

N. E. 812. The statute provides for licensing such sales, and makes a sale without a license a criminal offense. It provides that whoever, not having a license to keep a dramshop, shall sell any intoxicating liquor in any less quantity than one gallon, or in any quantity, to be drunk upon the premises, shall be punished by fine, or imprisonment, or both; and, if appellant has been guilty of a misuse of its corporate power by making sales of liquor to be drunk upon its premises, the judgment of the superior court must be affirmed. The only question to be determined is whether the furnishing and delivery of intoxicating liquors by appellant to its own members, to be drunk upon the premises, and which are paid for by the individual members to whom the same are furnished and delivered, constitute a sale. Counsel for appellant admits that the letter of the statute requires any and every one, without exception, who sells intoxicating liquors in any less quantity than one gallon, or in any quantity, to be drunk upon the premises, to take out a license to do so; and he fully appreciates that the definition of a dramshop adopted by the legislature is broad enough to include any place where intoxicating liquors are retailed in less quantity than one gallon; but he says that appellant contests the right to demand a license because it refuses to have its clubhouse considered a dramshop, or to be regarded as a dramshop keeper. The argument is that the court should not take the language of the statute literally, and that the general intent and spirit of the act do not require that it should be so taken. A dramshop, as defined by the statute, is a place where spirituous, or vinous, or malt liquors are retailed by less quantity than one gallon; and it is true that the term has, in popular acceptation, a more restricted meaning. It is commonly used to designate a place where intoxicating liquor is sold at a public bar frequented by the public without restriction, and, if the legislature had failed to define what was intended by the term "dramshop" it would be reasonable to presume that it was used in the ordinary and popular sense; but, of course, the legislature had a right to define what was meant by the term as used in the act, and the courts are bound by the definition. The argument of the appellant is the same as that of the druggist, Wright, who felt himself aggrieved that his drug store should be brought within the definition of a dramshop by the sale in good faith of liquor for purely medical purposes. His chief business was the sale of drugs and medicines, and he did not even sell intoxicating liquors as a beverage, as the appellant does. The court put in the background the popular idea of the [19] dramshop, saying that undue importance was given to that term, and enforced the law according to its literal meaning. The court said: The only safe course is to enforce the law as the legislature has made it, and not defeat its execution upon some hypothetical theory of public policy that finds no place or recognition in the act itself." Wright v. People, 101, Ill. 126. Appellant's clubhouse would be no more or less a dramshop with the license than without it, and, if the facts bring it within the definition adopted by the legislature, it must be held to be a dramshop, whether the definition accords with the popular understanding or not.”

The Court then takes up two of the cases above cited, holding to the contrary, to wit,—Klein v. Livingston Club, 177 Pa. 224, and State v. St. Louis Club, 125 Mo. 308, and after stating what was considered and decided in those cases, says:

“It is undoubtedly equitable, as said in the Pennsylvania case, that the members of a club who drink the liquor should pay for it, and that those who do not touch it should not pay anything; but we do not see how it can be said that the transaction is merely an equitable distribution between the members of property belonging to them in equal shares. The liquor belongs to the corporation as a legal entity, and no member owns any share of the liquor, as a tenant in common with the other members or otherwise. An association organized merely for social, literary, scientific, or political purposes, although not incorporated, is not a partnership. 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law 2d. ed. p. 1137. A member of such association has no individual right or interest in the property, and owns no proportionate share of it, but only has a right to the joint use so long as he continues to be a member. Even if they were tenants in common, a transfer of a specific part of the property to one for a stipulated price would be a sale. Appellant however, is incorporated, and its stockholders are not tenants in common of its property; but the title is in the corporation. The right of a stockholder is to participate, according to the amount of his stock, in the profits, and, upon the dissolution of the corporation, to share in the assets remaining after the payment of the debts. If a member should clandestinely enter the clubhouse and withdraw from what is called the "common property," as much of the liquor as would be represented by his interest as a member, it would hardly be contended that the act would not be larceny. The arguments presented to show that the dispensing of liquors for fixed prices paid by the members is not a sale, if applied to the case supposed or any other conceivable transaction, would certainly be unique. We agree with the views expressed in State v. Easton Social, Literary & Musical Club, 73 Md. 97, 10 L. R. A. 64, 20 Atl. 783, that there is no occasion to be astute, and to indulge in questionable refinements, in order to relieve these corporations of the [20] just consequences of their acts, or to endeavor by artificial or fictitious reasonings to permit these persons in combination to do what individuals without combination could not do.

The fact that there is not profit in a sale does not deprive the transaction of its character as a sale, and surely it makes no difference that the sale of the liquor is only incidental to the main purpose of the club. Mohrman v. State, 105 Ga. 709, 43 L. R. A. 398, 70 Am. St. Rep. 74, 32 S. E. 143. The sale of liquor is but an incident to the business of a drug store or restaurant. It is certainly but a trifling incident to the business of a large hotel. The business is carried on in department stores, where it is but a minor and incidental branch of the whole business.

Chicago v. Netcher, 183 Ill. 104, 48 L. R. A. 261, 75 Am. St. Rep. 93, 55 N. E. 707. It is immaterial whether the main purpose of a corporation is social pleasure or making money by the sale of merchandise, if intoxicating liquor is sold at retail as an incident of the main purpose or otherwise; and neither is the fact that the public generally are not admitted.

We are convinced that the former decision of the question here involved was correct, and the judgment of the Superior Court is affirmed.”

In Martin v. State, 59 Ala. 34, and State v. Neis, 108 N. C. 787 (12 L. R. A. 412), it was held that the employee of a social club, who, without a license, dispenses intoxicating liquors, was guilty of selling without a license, although the liquor had been purchased with the funds of the club, and was sold only to the members of the club, and the money received therefor was deposited in a common fund, and was spent only to replenish the stock of liquors for the use of the club.

And the club itself, upon such a state of facts, was held liable to the penalty for selling liquors by retail without a license, in State v. Essex Club, 53 N. J. L. 99 (20 Atl. 769).

In Mohrman v. State, 105 Ga. 709, it was held that the mere fact that the selling and drinking of intoxicating liquors was only an incident, and not the main object, of the incorporation of a social club, would make the place [21] where such liquors were dispensed to and drunk by members only, none the less a tippling-house, within the meaning of the statute making penal the keeping open of such a house on the Sabbath day.

In People v. Soule, 74 Mich. 250, it was held that a club properly organized in good faith could not purchase liquors by the quantity and distribute them among its members receiving pay therefor as they were distributed by the glass, the proceeds to go into the treasury of the club to be used in purchasing other liquors, or in paying expenses, without being liable to pay a retail tax for selling such liquors; it being clear that the statute regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors was not aimed at saloons or public bars alone, because it expressly provided that retail dealers "shall be held and deemed to include all persons who sell any of such liquors by the drink," and further provided that "all saloons, restaurants, bars in taverns or elsewhere, and all other places, except drug stores, where any of the liquors mentioned in this Act are sold or kept for sale either at wholesale, or retail, shall be closed on the first day of the week."

Another well considered recent case is that of Manning v. Canyon City, 101 Pac. 978 (Supreme Court of Colorado). The defendants constituted the board of control of the Elks Club of Canyon City. They were found guilty in the lower court of a violation of an ordinance reading as follows:

"Whosoever by himself or another either as principal, clerk agent, or servant, shall sell or dispose of, or shall give away for the purpose of avoiding any of the provisions of this ordinance, any intoxicating, spirituous, malt, vinous fermented or mixed liquors within the corporate limits of this city, or within one mile beyond the outer boundaries thereof, shall be fined not less than one hundred ($100) dollars, nor more than three hundred ($300) dollars for each offense; provided that this ordinance shall not apply to regularly licensed druggists, who may have a permit from the city council to sell such liquors, when sold in accordance with said permit.” [22].

In the opinion, Mr. Chief Justice Steele, speaking for the Court, says:

“The club is a part of and under the control of the Canyon City Lodge of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks of the United States of America. The membership of the order is in excess of a quarter of a million of persons, and it, through the subordinate lodges maintains clubs in many of the towns and cities of the country, and there are clubs of the order maintained in most of the important cities and towns of this State. This club is a bona fide club, and, as found by the court below, is composed of about 400 substantial and respectable citizens of Cannon City. It is maintained for the entertainment, pleasure and benefit of the members of the order, and any member of the order whether resident of Cannon City or elsewhere, is entitled to the privileges of the club. The club is supplied with newspapers, magazines, and such reading matter as the management may deem advantageous or desirable for the members. It maintains billiard, pool, and card tables. Food and liquors are dispensed to such of the members as may desire them. In short, it is a social club, like any other social club to be found in the larger towns and cities of the country; the dispensing of liquors being a mere incident to, and not the object of, the organization. It is an unincorporated association. No visitor or guest of a member is permitted to spend money in the club, but the member introducing the visitor or guest is responsible for his guest's entertainment. The club keeps on hand a supply of the various kinds of intoxicating liquors, which it dispenses to its members and guests, and the members of the order, at the rates fixed by the board of control. Those to whom liquors are supplied may pay cash or have the amount charged. The amount received from the members for the liquor goes to replenishing the supply of liquors and defraying the expenses of the club."

* * * * *

"It is contended by counsel for the defendants that the process by which the members of the club obtain the title to a quantity of liquor, to be disposed of by the individual as he may desire, is not a 'sale,' but a mere distribution of the liquor of the club among its members. On the other hand it is contended by the city that such process is a sale and is within the prohibition of the ordinance, and upon a determination of these propositions the whole controversy depends. If such disposing of liquors constitutes a sale, then the defendants were legally convicted, and the judgment should stand; otherwise the judgment should be reversed and the defendant discharged.

"The decisions are in irreconcilable conflict. In the decisions where courts hold that clubs are exempted from the license laws, it is generally because of some peculiar word or phrase contained in the statute, and it should be noted that no case is presented where a prohibition statute has been construed as exempting social clubs from its operations. In the case of State v. Kline, 50 Or. 426, 93 Pac. 237, decided in 1907, and the latest case we have seen on the subject, Mr. Justice Moore, in the course of the opinion said: 'In the note to the case of Barden v. Montana Club, 24 Am. St. Rep. 27, immediately following the excerpt hereinbefore [23] quoted, the editors of that valuable series of case laws makes the following observation as deducible from an examination of adjudications applicable to the inquiry, to wit: The question whether or not the furnishing of intoxicating or fermented liquor by a club to its members in the manner above stated constitutes a sale in violation of laws prohibiting sales, or whether or not it constitutes a sale within the meaning of a law requiring a license before one can engage in retailing such liquor, has been the subject of various and conflicting decisions by a number of the appellate courts of the country. While the cases cannot be reconciled, the current as well as the weight of authority in undoubtedly in favor of the rule that the distribution and consumption of liquors in a club by its members in the manner above stated is a sale and a violation of the laws of the nature stated.' Several cases are cited, and quotations therefrom are contained in the note that fully sustain the conclusion thus reached, and we adopt that part of such deduction as relates to the disposal of intoxicating liquor by a club to its members in violation of the provisions of a local option law, without further calling attention to the cases relied on.”

The Court then discussed a number of opinions hereinbefore cited, and continues:

“Supporting the doctrine announced in the foregoing decisions are the decisions of the Supreme Courts of Alabama, Kansas, Kentucky, North Carolina, Mississippi, Indiana, Michigan, Georgia, West Virginia, and Louisiana; and whenever the question has been presented to a federal court, that court has held the clubs liable as retailers to pay the government tax. Not only is the greater weight of authority, but, in our opinion, the better reason, on the side of those courts that hold the transaction between the club and its members, such as we have described herein, to be an ordinary sale.” (Citing cases.)

“There are many authorities supporting the view that the transaction by which a member of a club acquires a quantity of liquor for his own use upon the payment of a stipulated price is not a sale. It is so held in Missouri, by the Supreme Court, in State v. St. Louis Club, 125 Mo. 308, 28 S. W. 604, 26 L. R. A. 573; but Judge Phillips, then District Judge for the Western District of Missouri, held, in the case of United States v. Giller (C. C.), 54 Fed. 656, that social clubs where liquor was dispensed were retail dealers and were required to pay the Government tax, and in a case decided by the St. Louis Court of Appeals (State v. Bacon Club, 44 Mo. App. 86), it was held that such a transaction is a sale within the prohibition of the statute of the State. The opinion closes with this significant sentence: 'The principle of law that prohibits a laboring man from buying a drink of liquor in a saloon ought to prevent wealthy gentlemen from organizing themselves into corporations for the purpose of selling it to their members.' "

In Massachusetts the Supreme Court holds that [24] the distribution of liquor to the members of a club, by a transaction similar to the one before us, is not a sale. Com'rs v. Smith, 102 Mass. 144. But the federal court of Massachusetts held that such transactions were sales, and the clubs were liable for the violation of the federal laws as retail dealers. United States v. Wittig, 28 Fed. Cas. 744.

The Pennsylvania Supreme Court holds, in Klein v. Livingston Club, 177 Pa. 224, 35 Atl. 606, 34 L. R. A. 94, 55 Am. St. Rep. 717, that, where an incorporated social club is organized and conducted in good faith, owning its property in common, to which the furnishing of liquor to its members is merely incidental to the purpose for which it was organized, the furnishing of liquors does not constitute a sale; but the federal courts of Pennsylvania hold that such dealing with members of clubs does constitute a sale, and requires the clubs to pay the Government tax as retail liquor dealers. United States v. Alexis Club (D. C.), 98 Fed. 725. The facts in the federal case were about as they are here, and Judge McPherson, in his opinion, says, among other things: "Did the defendant, then, sell liquor to its members? I shall not review the irreconcilable cases upon this subject, nor make the superfluous attempt to produce a new argument, in support of my conclusion. I content myself with saying briefly, that I agree with the general opinion of the community, and hold the transaction to be a simple, ordinary sale. If a chartered club, such as the defendant, buys liquor, the legal title to this property is in the corporation, and not in the members. * * * The legal title, then, being in the corporation, it is further to be observed that, when the title passes to a consumer, it passes by a transaction that exhibits every element of a sale, and shows no outward sign of being anything else. The intending consumer asks to be served with a definite quantity of intoxicating drink. The owner of the legal title of the liquor, acting by a paid servant, agrees to the request, requires the price to be paid in cash, or accepts the consumer's promise to pay in the future, and thereupon delivers the subject of the bargain. Nothing else takes place, and, if this is not a sale, but is really a partial distribution of the common stock, the truth is so veiled that the participants in the transaction, I venture to assert, rarely suspect that they are taking part in anything but a commonplace sale. It is safe to say that—except, perhaps, among those lawyers that may be familiar with the discussion upon the subject—to order and receive liquor at a club is always regarded as a sale, and I see no sufficient reason for declining to accept the popular estimate of an act so generally known and so easily comprehended. * * * I may, perhaps, be permitted to add a single word in conclusion: 'If the result that I have reached is correct, I believe it to be in the line of enforcing equality before the law; and equality before the law is a principle of American society than which there is none more vital. Privilege and privileged classes are, and ought to be, intolerable; and it comes irritatingly near to a privilege when social clubs, offering advantages of comfort and luxury that are only within the reach of the more prosperous, escape a share [25] of the public burdens, because a refined reasoning declares that they are doing no more than distributing a common stock of liquor among their members, while the robust sense of the community, not excluding the club members themselves knew the transaction to be a sale.' "

There are other authorities which sustain counsel in their contention that the transaction of the club in dispensing liquor is not a sale, but we are unable to distinguish the act of the club in disposing of its liquors to its members and any other process by which the title to intoxicating liquors is passed from one person to another by delivery and payment. In many of the cases cited the liquor disposed of in clubs was the property of a corporation, and the courts hold that, as the legal title to the liquor was in the corporation, and not in the individual members, the transfer by the corporation to the members constituted a sale, and counsel attempts to distinguish between the case at bar and those cases.

When one becomes a member of the Elks' Club, he places his interest in the club property in the hands of a board of control, and he has a joint interest in the club property so long as he remains a member, subject to the right of the board of control to dispose of it as provided by the by-laws. The testimony shows that the Elks' Club, through its board of control, or a servant thereof, delivers to the members on demand such quantity of liquor as he may desire, for such price as has been fixed by the board, to be paid for in cash or to be charged to the member's account. The liquor thus delivered may be consumed by the member, or may be given away, or may be destroyed. The money that is received is used to replenish the treasury of the club, and in buying other liquors or supplies. The member, assuming that he has an interest in it, has but a minute interest; and, when he exchanges his money for a quantity of liquor, he pays for his minute interest and the interest of each of the other members. But it is doubtful if he has any interest which he may take by this method of distribution. "By becoming a member of a society or club a person acquires, not a severable right to any of its property, but merely a right to its joint use and enjoyment so long as he continues to be a member, which right ceases upon his withdrawal or expulsion from the society. The right of membership invests him with no individual transmissible interest in the property and effects of the association, and neither he nor any number less than the whole can dispose of such property, or any supposed proportionate part or interest therein." Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, (2d ed.), Vol. 25, p. 1135,

But when the members of a club chose the board of control with the authority to dispose of liquor belonging to the club, they relinquish their right to have the entire property of the club remain intact for joint use, occupancy and enjoyment of all the members, and make such board their agent to dispose of the liquor, and, in our opinion, such disposal by the board is a sale pure and simple. The transaction appears to contain all the elements of a sale. Such transaction is but a contract between the parties to give and to pass rights of property for money which the buyer pays, or promises to pay, to the [26] seller for the thing bought and sold; and it would require, to paraphrase the remarks of Judge McPherson, a refined reasoning to declare that the club is doing no more than distributing a common stock of liquor among its members, while the robust sense of the cumminity, not excluding the members themselves, know the transaction to be a sale.

Under the by-laws of the club, any of the several hundred thousand members of the order of Elks in the United States, is entitled to all the privileges of the club, and it is not seriously contended that under a by-law such as this the delivery of liquor for pay does not constitute a sale; but we have determined not to base our judgment upon such fact alone. Owing to the great number of social clubs in the State whose status concerning the disposition of intoxicating liquors should be determined, we have concluded to rest our opinion on the broader ground and settle the controversy.”

The latest case which I have been able to find on this subject is Ada County v. Boise Commercial Club, decided by the Supreme Court of Idaho, November 1, 1911, and reported in 118 Pac., at page 1086 et seq. This was an action by the County of Ada against the Boise Commercial Club to collect a license for the sale of liquors. The case was submitted on an agreed statement of facts. The defendant was a corporation organized under the laws relating to religious, social and benevolent corporations, had no capital stock and was not conducted for pecuniary profit. The main purpose of the club, was the same as that of other commercial clubs—to advance the commercial interests of the city and State.

In the opinion the Court says:

“This appeal involves the construction and application of section 1506, Rev. Codes. This section reads as follows: “It shall be unlawful for any person, by himself, by agent, or otherwise, to sell spirituous, malt or fermented liquors or wines, to be drank in, or about the premises where sold without having first procured a license and given a bond.
* * * ” This section became the law of this State on the 1st day of July, 1891. Counsel for appellant makes two different contentions against the application of this statute to the facts of this case: First, that it was not the intention of the Legislature to make the word “person” as used in section 1506, include clubs of the kind and character described in the agreed statement of facts. We think the statutes of this State answer this objection. [27]

(1) Section 15 of the Revised Codes provides: “Words and phrases are construed according to the content and the approved usage of the language, but technical words and phrases, and such others as have acquired a peculiar and appropriate meaning in law, or are defined in the succeeding section, are to be construed according such peculiar and appropriate meaning or definition.”

(2) Section 16, Rev. Codes, among other things, provides: “The word person includes a corporation as well as a natural person.” This latter section of the statute became a law while Idaho was still a territory, and has been continued as a part of the laws of Idaho since its statehood, and the definition of the word “person” has never been changed or altered or questioned by the Legislature in any subsequent legislation, and the definition given in the statute has been accepted as the true and correct definition, and such has been the usage of the term “person” since the adoption of such statute; and in construing the same we are admonished by section 15, supra, that words and phrases are construed according to the context and the approved usage of the language, and we think that the accepted usage of the term “person” has been and is that it includes a corporation as well as a natural person.

(3) It is, however, urged by counsel for appellant that, inasmuch as the Legislature fails to include the term “incorporated club” in the provisions of section 1506, therefore the Legislature did not intend to include such club within the provisions of said section. It was unnecessary to classify the character or kinds of corporations which would be required to secure a license to sell intoxicating liquors to be drank on the premises, unless the Legislature had in mind the exclusion of a particular kind or character of corporation from the operation of the statute, because it had previously been enacted and had long been a law when section 1506, was enacted and the word "person" included all corporations, and we think the conclusion is inevitable that, if the Legislature intended to exclude any particular kind of corporation, they would have so declared in the section. Therefore, when the Legislature said "any person" they intended that the word should mean the same as defined by the Code, and should include corporations, and, if so, if clubs are corporations, the word "person" includes such corporations.

The Court further says:—

"The second question urged upon this appeal is: Are the transactions with reference to the distribution of intoxicating liquors as set out in the agreed statement of facts sales? It must be conceded at the inception of a discussion of this question that the courts are very much divided. This conflict of views has arisen out of two different causes, the first the language used in the statutes of the various states requiring a license; the second, an apparent notion that there are good clubs and bad clubs, and that the clubs which are good and are not exclusively engaged in the business of selling intoxicating liquors are, or ought to be, exempt from the statute requiring a license, while all other clubs must procure a license. Under the facts in this case the Boise Commercial Club is a corporation organized as a club and it is agreed: [28] "That ever since the organization of this club it has maintained in connection with its buffet a stock of vinous, spirituous and malt liquors and cigars in quantities sufficient to fulfill the wants of its members and their guests. That these liquors and cigars are purchased by the club at wholesale prices and supplied to members and their guests exclusively, without pecuniary profit to the club, in small quantities or individual drinks, to be consumed by such member and guest within the clubrooms. That the amount paid by such member for such drink is in excess of its original cost to the club, but the amount of this charge is regulated to cover the actual cost to the club of the liquor and cigars and expense of serving the same and conducting the buffet. On being served the member signs a card which is thereafter filed by the servant of the club in the office of the secretary, and is paid by the member before leaving the clubroom or charged to his account." While it is true the furnishing of such liquors is merely incidental to the main objects and purposes of the club, still that fact is no way lessens the transaction. The club purchases and keeps in stock the liquors, and furnishes the same to the members and their guests, and a charge is made therefore in excess of the cost of such liquor to the club. It thus appears from this statement that the liquors are the property of the club. (Citing cases.)

The club being a corporation, under our statute the stockholders and members thereof bear the same relation to the club as stockholders in any regular corporation organized under the statute, and the property purchased by the club and dispensed to its members is a disposition on the part of the club, to the members, of such property, and the members secure the possession of the liquor by paying the club a certain price. An examination of this statute discloses the fact that the "person" making the sale is not limited to a person engaged in the business of selling liquor, or a person engaged in conducting a saloon or a disorderly place of business, or that the selling of liquor shall be the principal business conducted, and not a mere incident to aid the principle business, but does require that all persons who sell, whether the sale be an incident of, or the principal business, or be made at a profit or a loss, shall procure a license before the sale is made.

Had the Legislature intended to make any exception of the extent of the sale or the place where or the manner of the sale, or the place where the liquor is sold, or whether the sale was at a profit, or whether it was made simply to aid a general business carried on, it no doubt would have made some provision in the statute for such exception. The fact that the sales made by the club are merely incidents of the general purposes and objects of the club, and are not made for profit, does not relieve the club from the obligations of the statute, because if they were true, then there is no reason why a grocery store, or a dry goods store, or a blacksmith shop might not keep a stock of liquor on hand and sell the same as a mere incident to the business carried on by such person, and as a means of inducement to persons to patronize the particular place. So might the entire populace organize itself [29] into various corporations or organizations or clubs for the purpose of carrying on or promoting some particular business or enterprise, and, as an incident to the main business, keep a stock of intoxicating liquors on hand and furnish the same to the members or patrons, even at a loss, and thereby increase their patronage so that the increase in trade would be the profit, and thus the statute be entirely evaded. It is no doubt true that when the Commercial Club was organized it attached as a part of the business of the club the sale and disposition of intoxicating liquors as an inducement to persons to become members of the club in order that they might have the accommodations furnished at the bar of the club, and the club may have benefited and profited by the fact that its membership was increased by reason of this special inducement, although the direct profits of the sale of the liquor was a matter of little consequence and of little profit. Section 1506 of the statute however, makes no such exception, and there is no other provision of the statute which seems to make any such exception.

But it is contended that there was no sale made by the club of intoxicating liquors. The stipulation of fact says that the club purchased intoxicating liquor and supplied it to members and their guests, and that the amount paid by the members for such drink was in excess of the original cost to the club. Was this a sale within the meaning of the statute? There is no definition given by the statute of the word "sale" as used generally throughout the Code, but we are admonished by the provisions of section 15 of the Code that "words" and phrases are construed according to the context and the approved usage of the language," and the word "sale" as used in said section is a word that has been well defined in its meaning by the courts and text writers, and is also a word of approved usage. As generally used "sale" means the transfer of title by valid agreement from one party to another for some consideration. 1 Mecham on Sales Sec. 1; 1 Benjamin on Sales p. 1; Black's Law Dictionary p. 1053.

In the case of State v. Kline, 50 Ore. 426, 93 Pac? 241, in defining the word "sale" used in a statute which prohibited any person within the prescribed bounds of a prohibition district to sell any intoxicating liquors whatsoever, and that such person should be subject to prosecution, the court says: "It would seem from an inspection of the language last quoted, that the section was framed with an intent to prevent the disposal of intoxicating liquors by a nonincorporated social club to its members within prohibited territory, even if it were determined that the transfer of the special property in the liquor by an agent of the organization to a member thereof constituted only a gift. Where, however, as is assumed in the case at bar intoxicating liquors are purchased by an incorporated society, to be used as is hereinbefore detailed, it would appear that the corporation is the owner of the liquors, and, when they are dispensed to a member with the intent to pass the title in the goods, the act constitutes a "sale." In that case the court had under consideration the liability of an agent of a corporation organized for the same general purpose as the applicant in this case." [30]

The Court then discussed the Colorado case above cited and the opinion of Judge McPherson, in United States v. Alexis Club, 98 Fed. 725, and says:—

“We think this statement of the Federal Court is correct and clear, and that little can be added to what is there said. We think, however, we might supplement the language of that court by saying that we do not believe that the opinion is generally entertained by members of any social club, incorporated under the laws of a state, which sells intoxicating liquors, and a charge is made therefor, that the transaction is anything else than a sale. The member makes the purchase in the same manner and pays the same price for the article purchased as he would at the common bar of a saloon, and the transaction is carried on in the same manner as a transaction involving the purchase of a pound of sugar or a can of coffee in a grocery store. He never considers or recognizes that the article purchased is his property, but does recognize that the property is the property of the club, and that he is paying for a distribution of property belonging to himself, but does recognize that the property is the property of the club, and that he is paying for the same in the same manner as he would pay for any article purchased of a mercantile company engaged in that line of business. In the case of City of Spokane v. Baughman, 54 Wash. 315m 103 Pac. 14, the Supreme Court of the State of Washington, had under discussion the question of the sale of intoxicating liquor at the Spokane Club, organized for the same general purposes and having the same objects as the appellant club, and says: “Among other accommodations furnished by the Spokane Club for the use of its members and their guests * * * it has maintained a room in the club quarters, with one of the regular club employees in charge, where cigars, liquors, wines, beers, and mineral waters are furnished, at charges from time to time fixed by the board of managers of the club. No money is received by the attendant for goods so furnished, but slips are signed by the members, showing the character of the goods furnished and the cost thereof. These slips are turned in by the attendant to the bookkeeper of the club, and are charged to the account of the member, and in due course are paid by him." The language of the ordinance which was alleged to have been violated provides: If any person shall, within the limits of the City of Spokane Falls, sell, dispose of," etc. And the Court says: "When the liquor is bought through the regularly constituted agent of the corporation, it undoubtedly belongs to the corporation, the title as well as the possession, being in the corporation, and it remains there until it is transferred to the buyer for a consideration. Then it becomes the property of the purchaser, and it is at his absolute disposal. He can drink it himself, give it to his guest, or throw it away. The corporation has no further interest in it. In other words it has been paid for, and the transaction, it seems to us, involves all the elements of a sale." [31]

After discussing a number of the cases above cited, the Court adds:

"While there are many other authorities supporting the rule announced in the cases cited and considered above, yet we deem it unnecessary to go into a further discussion of those cases. We think the weight of authority is with the proposition that where a statute in positive terms prohibits the sale of intoxicating liquors to be drank upon the premises where sold, without first procuring a license, and no exceptions are made excluding clubs organized as corporations, and such corporations are persons under the statute, then all sales made by a person or corporation of whatever character, where no license has been procured, come within the provisions of Rev. Codes, Section 1506."

In discussing a California case which gave weight to the fact that the statute or ordinance under which the prosecution was conducted did not specifically name social clubs, the Court says:

"This objection is very easily answered by saying that if the City of Los Angeles, or any other city, was intended to be excluded from the operation of an ordinance or statute which absolutely prohibits the sale of intoxicating liquors without a license, it is a very simple matter for the city or Legislature to so provide by language that clearly shows such an intent. We cannot agree with the California court or the cases which follow its reasoning. To our mind these cases announcing such a rule have attempted to lay down principles which would shield and protect certain classes selling intoxicating liquors in violation of a statute."

The Court then discussed in detail the cases holding that such transactions do not constitute sales, explaining or criticising the same, and continues:—

"Section 1506, does not require a license only from those engaged in the business or occupation of selling liquors, but it is made unlawful for any person to sell, whether such person be engaged in the business of selling or not. The person making the sale is not required to be engaged in that particular business. If it is a sale, then a license must be procured under the provisions of the statute, and the Texas case holds such is a sale if it be in a territory where the sale is prohibited. In this State the sale is prohibited where a license is not obtained, and a sale without license is in territory where a sale is prohibited without the same.

Many other cases are cited by counsel for appellant which holds that a club organized for social purposes, such as the Boise Commercial Club, where intoxicating [32] liquors are purchased by the club and dispensed to members, and such disposition of the intoxicating liquors is merely incident to the main objects and purposes of the club, is not subject to revenue license laws, and although the statutes make no mention of the club as being exempt from the provisions of the revenue laws, yet the courts will say that sales made by such clubs are merely distribution of the property of the club to the members to whom it rightfully belongs, and that, therefore, there is no sale. We cannot agree with this line of decisions. In our judgment every single opinion which holds as above indicated, partakes of a disposition and effort on the part of the court to shield the clubs and remove them from the operation of the statutes solely because they are social in character and composed of men who are inclined to promote commercial interests and business opportunities and social gatherings. To our mind that theory of the application of the law results in a class distinction which is unreasonable and dangerous, and not justified by legislative enactments or common-sense application.

It is also argued on behalf of the appellant that the appellant club has not been called upon to procure a license under the provisions of section 1506 of the Revised Codes since its organization, until a short time before the stipulation of facts was entered into, and that the appellant club was never required by the county or its officials nor by any State official to take out a license under said section, and that such demand has never been made upon any bona fide social club or corporation throughout the State—although such clubs and corporations have been in existence and in operation in Ada county and other parts of the State for more than fifteen years, and had furnished and supplied intoxicating liquors in the manner adopted by the appellant club; and because of this policy in carrying out the laws of the State it is claimed that the legislative intent in enacting section 1506 is shown, and that such clubs were not intended to be within the provisions of said section. After section 1506 was enacted, as a law of the State, and in plain, clear and positive language prohibited the sale of intoxicating liquors to be drank on the premises where sold without a license, it was the duty of the proper officers in each county to enforce the law, and collect the revenue provided for in the statute from all persons making sales of liquor in violation of the law, and the mere fact that such officers have failed to perform their duty will not control this court in giving effect to the plain language of the statute. It is an elementary principle that the neglect or failure of public officers to do and perform their duties as required by law will not estop the public or prevent any rights or acts of the State in enforcing such laws, and we are not inclined to announce as a legal proposition that the failure of the public officials to collect a revenue license where such is required for a number of years will be evidence of the intent of the legislative body in passing such law to exclude from the operation of such statute persons and corporations from whom such officers have failed to collect such revenue license.

We have most carefully gone through and examined the cases cited by both sides in this case, and are [33] thoroughly convinced that under the provisions of section 1506 the question is not in doubt; that the section was intended by the Legislature to prohibit all persons of every kind, nature and description, including corporations of all kinds and natures, from selling intoxicating liquors to be drank on the premises without first procuring a license; and that good reasoning and common-sense makes such a statute applicable and operative as against a corporation, although the sale of intoxicating liquors is a mere incident of the general objects and purposes of the club." See note to this case in 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 101.

In our view the decided weight of authority and the better reasoning, as shown by the cases above cited and reviewed, are that such transactions as we are discussing, notwithstanding some of the text books to the contrary, constitute SALES of intoxicating liquors within the meaning of the license laws, many of the statutes construed being not nearly so plain and unambiguous as our own statute.

Permit us to close this branch of the argument by quoting a pertinent paragraph from Judge McPherson's opinion in United States v. Alexis Club, 98 Fed. 725, in which he holds that such transactions constitute sales:

“If the result I have reached is correct, I believe it to be in the line of enforcing equality before the law; and equality before the law is a principle of American society, than which there is none more vital. Privilege and a privileged class are, and ought to be, intolerable; and it comes irritatingly near to a privilege where social clubs offering advantages of comfort and luxury that are only within the reach of the more prosperous, escape a share of the public burdens, because a refined reasoning declares that they are doing no more than distributing a common stock of liquors among their members, while the robust sense of the community, not excluding the club members themselves, know the transactions to be a sale.”

SECOND QUESTION INVOLVED.

IF SUCH TRANSACTIONS DO CONSTITUTE SALES, THEN, DO SUCH SALES BY SAID “ENI” CLUB WITHOUT FIRST HAVING SECURED A BARROOM LICENSE CONSTITUTE A VIOLATION OF SECTION 2581 OF

THE COMPILED LAWS OF THE TERRITORY OF ALASKA?

We are of the opinion, that, aside from the decisions cited, there are three other things that are absolutely [34] controlling in this jurisdiction in the construction of this license law, FIRST, the language of the law itself which precludes any other construction than that such sales are in violation thereof, SECOND, the decisions of the Federal Courts construing the Internal Revenue Laws, the said courts without exception holding that such transactions constitute the clubs or persons dispensing the liquor, retail liquor dealers, within the meaning of those laws, and THIRD, the construction by the Courts of a similar statute passed by Congress, prior to the passage of the Act in question.

Of these in order:—

FIRST: The language of the statute is "*that no person, corporation, or company, shall sell, offer for sale or keep for sale, traffic in, barter, or exchange for goods * * * any intoxicating liquors*" etc. Now the term "person" in law, is almost universally held to include corporations, partnerships and associations, but to remove all doubt or question, Congress added the words "corporation or company." Now the word "company" in a statute, has often been held to mean and include corporations, partnerships, and voluntary associations of individuals, of all or any kind. See the cases cited in "Words and Phrases" under the head "Company." There can be no reasonable doubt but that the word "company," as used in this Act, was meant to and does include all voluntary associations of individuals.

Again, the statute says that "a retail or barroom license shall be required for every hotel, tavern, boat, barroom, or other place in which intoxicating liquors are sold at retail." And again, "That every place where * * * liquors * * * are sold * * * to be drunk upon the premises, shall be regarded as a barroom," and further, that the possession of liquors "with the means and appliances [35] for carrying on the business of dispensing the same to be drunk where sold, shall be prima facie evidence of a barroom within the meaning of the Act, and the license therefor shall be known as a barroom license."

The language of this Act is so plain that we can hardly assume that any one in good faith will contend that an association of individuals may purchase liquors, prepare a place for dispensing the same to be drunk upon the premises, and charge the individual ordering the same a price practically equal to that charged by the admitted and confessed barrooms of the city, without being subject to the license laws of the Territory, but such is the position taken by counsel for the defendants.

They argue that only those persons, corporations and companies who are required to have a license by the sections preceding Section 2581, are prohibited by said last named section to sell intoxicating liquors without a license. However, the falacy lies in their assumption that the preceding sections do not require all persons, corporations and companies to have a license. When the statute (Section 2571) says "No person, corporation or company, shall sell, offer for sale, or keep for sale, traffic in, barter or exchange for goods in said District of Alaska, any intoxicating liquor," except as thereafter provided, the prohibition is universal, and the inhibition is placed upon every individual and conceivable combination of individuals, and the only possible avenue of escape therefrom by defendants is through the exception clause. Does the exception clause—"except as hereinafter provided" cover a combination of individuals such as the "Eni" Club? What exceptions are thereafter provided by the statute? Just three classes, viz., (1) Druggist and apothecaries; (2) [36] Sales under provisions of law, such as marshal's sales, administrator's sales, etc., and (3) Sales by those who have applied for and secured a license to sell.

It cannot be claimed by the defendants that their club comes within either the first or second classes excepted from the prohibition. It follows, therefore, that defendants' club must come under the third exception, to wit, the provision providing for the application for and securing of a license, or it is absolutely prohibited from selling at all.

However, in our opinion, the words of said statute: "No person, corporation or company shall sell" etc., "except as hereinafter provided" should be construed to mean the same as if they read "Any person, corporation or company may sell, etc., upon a compliance with the following provisions and not otherwise." In other words the statute means that no person, corporation or company be prohibited absolutely from selling intoxicating liquors but only conditionally, that is the prohibition applies until such person, corporation or company applies for and secures a license in accordance with the provisions of the statute following the provision, "except as hereinafter provided," above referred to. Hence, defendants' club is forbidden to sell intoxicating liquors until it applies for and secures a license. The statute contemplates that every person, corporation or company shall apply for and secure a license before such person, corporation or company is allowed to sell. It says in plain and simple language that no person, corporation or company shall sell until it has complied with the provision requiring a license. [37]

Our contention is that Section 2581 is as broad as Section 2571; that every one who is forbidden to sell without a license by Section 2571 is subjected to a penalty as prescribed by Section 2581. Any other construction of Section 2581 would destroy the partial effect of Section 2571. The evident intent of Section 2581 is that "any person (except druggists and apothecaries and persons making sales under provisions of law requiring them to sell personal property) who shall sell intoxicating liquors, without first having obtained a license so to do, shall upon conviction thereof be fined etc." Said Section 2581 provides that "Any one engaging in the sale of intoxicating liquors * * * , who is required by it (this act) to have a license as herein specified, without first having obtained a license to do so as herein provided, * * * upon conviction thereof shall be fined. etc." Now the relative clause "who is re- quired by it to have a license as herein specified” is either explanatory or restrictive, that is it either expresses some attribute of its antecedent “anyone” or it restricts the application of such antecedent. The rule is that explanatory or appositive clauses should be set off by commas while restrictive clauses should not be so set off. Applying, therefore, the rules of grammatical construction, the said clause is merely explanatory and is not intended to restrict the application of its antecedent to a particular class of persons who sell liquor without a license. Implying that there are other persons who sell without a license to whom it does not apply. Let me illustrate: If I say “Roman citizens, who are patriotic, should avenge the death of Caesar,” and place the clause “who are patriotic” within commas, said clause is appositive or explanatory and the sentence means [38] that all Roman citizens are patriotic and should avenge the death of Caesar. But on the other hand if I use the same identical words but leave out the commas, the clause, “who are patriotic” is restrictive and limits its antecedent citizens to the patriotic class of Roman citizens, and implies that there is a class of Roman citizens who are not patriotic, and the sentence would mean merely that patriotic Roman citizens should avenge the death of Caesar. Now, applying the same rule of grammatical construction to said section 2581, the words “Any one engaging etc., who is required by it to have a license as herein provided,” means that “every one engaging, etc., is required by it to have a license as herein provided.”

There are other reasons why said section 2581

should be construed to be as broad as said section 2571. They are parts of the same Act and should be construed in the light of every other portion of the Act. A consideration of section 2577 of the same Act will illumine the matter under consideration. Said section 2577, inter alia, provides,—“That a retail or barroom license shall be required of every hotel, tavern, boat, barroom, or other place in which intoxicating liquors are sold at retail.” We are assuming in this part of our argument that the transactions by which members of defendants’ club are furnished intoxicating liquors constitute a sale, having argued that matter under the first question presented in this brief. Assuming, therefore, that the transactions complained of by plaintiff constitute a sale, there can be no question that they constitute a sale at retail, and a retail or barroom license is required therefor by the above provisions of said section 2577. The language of the section is that “every barroom or other place where intoxicating liquors are sold at retail,” must secure [39] a barroom or retail license. If defendants’ club is a barroom, the declaration is specific that it must have a license. If defendants’ club is any other place where intoxicating liquors are sold at retail, the declaration is equally specific that it must have a license. But Congress has gone further in this same section, 2577, and has defined a “barroom” as every place where distilled, malt or fermented wines, liquors or cordials are sold in quantities as prescribed for retail dealers by section 3244 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to be drunk upon the premises.” Under this definition, defendants' club is unquestionably a barroom; but the said section goes another step further and make the possession of such liquors with the appliances for drinking the same where sold prima facie evidence that such place is a barroom. Assuming that the transactions complained of constitute a sale, can any one doubt that the status of defendants' club is fixed by said section 2577 as a barroom? Can any one mistake the meaning of this section when it says "that a retail or barroom license is required of every * * * barroom, etc?"

Since the defendants' club is a barroom and every barroom is required to have a license, it follows that defendants' club is required to have a license by said section 2577. In fact every place where intoxicating liquors are sold at retail must have a retail barroom license, whether such sale is made by a person, a corporation or a company. The nature of the business determines whether or not the license is required, not the nature of the agency which makes the sale. Every place must secure a license whether it is an aristocratic club or a democratic saloon, both are barrooms in the eyes of the law. [40]

Now, if every place where intoxicating liquors are sold at retail is required to have a license irrespective of who runs the place, it follows that every one is required to have a license before engaging in such sale. This is the irresistible conclusion from said section 2577.

Reading said section 2581 in the light of said section 2577, we would ask in the words of the explanatory clause of said section 2581, "Who is required by it (the statute) to have a license as herein specified"? And the answer is "every one who sells at retail" which necessarily includes defendants' club. Hence, if defendants' club sells intoxicating liquors without first having secured a license so to do, being required by said section 2577 to have a license, it is amenable to said section 2581, and its members, agents and officers are guilty of a misdemeanor.

But counsel for defendants say that said section 2581 applies only to persons, corporations and companies who are required by other provisions of the Act to have a license, and that since voluntary associations, or social clubs are not expressly mentioned, eo nomine, by the statute, their club is not required to have a license. In other words they assert that said section 2581 contemplates at least two classes who sell intoxicating liquors without a license, those who are required by the terms of the Act to have a license, and those who are not so required and that it is only the first of these classes who can be punished.

What is the chief argument in support of such a construction? Is it that the form of the petition for a license, prescribed by section 2574, for a person is not adapted to the use of defendants' club; that the requirements that the applicant shall state in such petition that he will conduct the business himself and not as agent for another person, and [41] that he will superintend in person the management of the business, and perhaps some others, are statements that defendants' club, having no legal entity, could not make. But the same objection could be advanced on behalf of any corporation, co-partnership or aggregation of persons. The form of petition prescribed by the statute is adapted only for the application of a single person, but it does follow that it cannot be modified in form to meet the requirements of other classes of applicants? If corporations, or companies could not under said section 2574 apply for licenses, we can hardly divine the purpose of embodying them in section 2571 wherein they are prohibited from selling intoxicating liquors except as in said act thereafter provided.

No corporation can take an oath or superintend or conduct a business personally. Its very nature precludes it from acting except by its officers and agents; a partnership or other aggregation of persons could do no more, they must act as individuals or by their agents and not otherwise. Are we to advise this Court, therefore, that neither a corporation nor co-partnership is required by our license laws to apply for and secure a license before engaging in the sale of intoxicating liquors?

The contrary has been the practice of this Court. Corporations and co-partnerships have always applied for and secured licenses to sell intoxicating liquors under said section 2574, notwithstanding the inadaptability of the prescribed form of petition to the nature of such corporation or co-partnership. At the present time there are three co-partnerships and one corporation here in Nome, which are licensed to sell intoxicating liquors at retail, namely, Stadie and Hill; Caldwell and Wettergren and Young and Van Sickle [42] co-partnerships, and the Seward Commercial Company, a corporation, said last corporation holding a wholesale license also. We submit that when an officer of the corporation or a member of a co-partnership makes and files a petition on behalf of his corporation or co-partnership complying with the prescribed form of petition to the extent that the nature of the application will permit, that the same is all that is contemplated by said section 2574. And such has been the uniform holding of this court as is evidenced by the licenses now issued to corporations and co-partnerships.

Let us trace counsels' contention to its final analysis. What would it mean for this court to hold that defendants' club (an aggregation of individuals) cannot apply for and secure a license to sell intoxicating liquors because the form of application prescribed by statute for a person is not adapted for the application of any other class of applicants? It would mean that the Seward Commercial Co., a corporation, which is now paying to the Clerk of this Court for both wholesale and retail liquor licenses annually the sum of $3,000.00, would never pay another cent; it would mean that Stadie and Hill, Caldwell and Wettergren and Young and Van Sickle, who are now each paying the sum of one thousand dollars annually to the Clerk of this Court, would find other uses for their money; but each and all of them would continue to do business at the old stand without fear of molestation from the collector of license fees, or of prosecutions by the United States Attorney.

And this is not the whole of the result of such a ruling. Every saloon man in this Division would immediately form either a corporation or a co-partnership, and thereby [43] exempt himself from the license requirement of the statute. Why should they pay a large annual license fee to the Government, if corporations and companies can engage in the same business free?

Counsels' argument reduces itself to an absurdity for it is certainly absurd to argue that it was the intention of Congress in enacting a revenue law to provide so patent an opening for the complete evasion and nullification thereof.

SECOND: The decisions of the Federal Courts:

As above stated, the Federal Courts without exception, so far as we have been able to find, hold that the dispensing of liquors by clubs, associations, etc., whether incorporated or not, constitute them retail liquor dealers and subject to the license tax prescribed by the internal revenue laws. These courts brush aside with scant courtesy the subterfuges and specious pleas that such transactions do not constitute sales. See—

U. S. v. Wittig, 28 Fed. Cases, 744;

U. S. v. Giller, 54 Fed. 656;

U. S. v. Alexis Club, 98 Fed. 725;

U. S. v. Woods, Fed. Cases No. 16,759;

U. S. v Roliger, Fed. Cases No. 16,190a.

It should be noted that the first three cases cited are from courts sitting in states in which the State courts have held such clubs and associations not subject to the license laws of the State, that of Judge Lovell in U. S. v. Wittig, sitting in the District Court of Massachusetts, that of Judge Philips, sitting in the Western Dist. of Missouri, in U. S. v. Giller, and that of Judge McPherson, sitting in the Eastern District of Pennsylvania in the case of U. S. v. Alexis Club.

In U. S. v. Roliger, supra, a number of persons united themselves together into a voluntary association [44] for the purpose of providing themselves with whiskey and beer as they wanted it, charging a membership fee out of which the first stock of liquors were purchased. This liquor was furnished to members at a price fixed by a committee and the funds arising therefrom were used in replenishing the stock of liquors and in the payment of expenses. No profits were made.

“The Court (Treat, District Judge) instructed the jury that under the facts, as stated, each member of the association was liable for carrying on business as retail liquor dealer without paying the special tax, and the fact that the business was being carried on without any attempt to make a profit out of it made no difference, as the law requires those who sell or offer for sale malt or spirituous liquors, shall pay the special tax, without reference to whether the selling or offering for sale is done for the sake of profit or not; and the fact that none but members of the association were allowed to partake of the liquor made no difference. The association was a partnership, in which all the members seem to have been equal partners, and liquors, when purchased in bulk, belonged to the partnership; but when the individual partner went to the clerk of the concern, and obtained from him a drink of the partnership liquor, and paid the clerk for that drink at the price fixed, that was a purchase of so much liquor from the partnership, and it was a sale of so much liquor by the partnership to this individual partner, and for so carrying on business the partnership should have paid a special tax as retail liquor dealers, and having failed and refused to do so, each member of the partnership became liable to the criminal provision of the law.

In United States v. Wittig, supra, the essential facts are identical with the case at bar. The Court says:

“There seems to be no doubt that the club sells beer to its members? Every element of a sale is present; the delivery of the beer on the one part, and the payment on the other. It was argued that at common law, a man cannot buy of himself and others. This is a mistake. The common law recognizes such a sale, though, if the contract is executory, the common law has no mode of enforcing it. * * *

“If I am right in saying that the beer is sold by the club to its members, the club is within section 18, (Sec. 3244 R. S.) above referred to, and the question is whether the generality of these words is to be restricted by a consideration of the subject-matter or by the words of Section 16 (3242 R. S.), which speaks of the same persons as dealers and as those ‘who shall carry on the business,’ etc.” If the questions were merely whether the club carries on the [45] business of beer selling there would seem to be great doubt; but section 18 appears to be intended to define such dealers with as much exactness as may be, and, if so, the ordinary definition of dealers, or persons carrying on a business is of no importance."

"This is a revenue law, and the decisions of the Supreme Court require us to construe it liberally in favor of the revenue, to prevent evasions. So construed, I think it must be held that any course of selling though to a restricted class of persons and without a view to profit, is within its meaning."

Applying the same reasoning to section 2577 of the Compiled Laws of Alaska, we may say that said section having defined a barroom and required a license therefor, the ordinary definition of barrooms or of persons engaged in the business of selling liquor at retail is of no importance. The statute settles the matter beyond cavil.

These decisions are, we think, controlling in this jurisdiction in the construction of said license statute.

THIRD: The construction by the courts of a similar statute passed by Congress, before our license law was enacted:

It is a familiar rule of construction that the adoption of a law previously adopted by another state or jurisdiction, adopts also the construction put upon that law by the courts of such other state or jurisdiction.

The Alaska license law was passed by Congress in 1899, 30 Statutes at Large 1335–13,341. The sections and paragraphs we are construing were taken from “An Act regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia,” passed by Congress March 3, 1893 (See 27 St. at L., p. 563). A comparison of Sections 1 and 8 of said Act with sections 2571 and 2577 of the Compiled Laws of Alaska, shows that the paragraphs we are construing were [46] adopted from the said District of Columbia Act. Section 2571 of the Alaska Act is identical with Section 1 of the District of Columbia Act, except that in the Alaska Act the words “corporation or company” are inserted after the word “person” and “District of Alaska” is substituted for District of Columbia. The parts of Section 2577 of the Alaska Act above quoted are taken word for word from Section 8 of the District of Columbia Act.

Now, prior to the passage by Congress of the Alaska Act applying the District of Columbia Act to the District of Alaska, the highest court in the District of Columbia had construed said Act in its application to clubs. In Army and Navy Club v. District of Columbia, the Court of Appeals of the District held that the said license law was applicable to said club. (See 8 App. D. C. 544.) We have not the text of this decision, as these reports are not in the city. The case was decided in 1896 (See Am. Dig. 1896, Pt. 1). In this case “it was held that a social club, with a limited membership, organized for the maintenance of a library and for social purposes, which dispenses wines and liquors to its members according to a tariff of rates sufficient to replenish the stock and provide for the necessary expenses of the club, but not sufficient to pay any profit to its members, was a barroom subject to the license fee.” (See Note to South Shore Country Club v. People, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 521.)

Note that this decision was rendered in 1896, while Congress did not adopt and apply this Act to the District of Alaska, until 1899. Now, following the canon of statutory construction above stated, it must be conclusively presumed that Congress in applying said Act to the District [47] of Alaska, adopted the construction given to it by the highest court of the District of Columbia. But apparently to remove all question, Congress inserted the words “corporation or company” after the word “person” in said District of Columbia Act, in applying said Act to the District of Alaska.

Upon consideration of the whole matter we are of the opinion that the question is not in doubt; that such clubs as we are considering are clearly subject to the license laws of the Territory, and consequently all members of the club are liable to prosecution and to loss of reputation and property interests if the defendants are not restrained from further violations of the law. Hence, the demurrer to the amended complaint should be overruled and the prayer of the complaint granted.

[Endorsed]: No. 2514. In the District Court for the District of Alaska, Second Division. E. C. Elwood, Plaintiff, vs. John H. Mustard et al., Defendants. Order Allowing Appeal and Fixing Amount of Bond. Filed in the Office of the Clerk of the District Court of Alaska, Second Division, at Nome. Oct. 17, 1914. G. A. Adams, Clerk. By _____, Deputy. L. G. J. Lomen, Attorney for Defendants. [56]

In the District Court for the District of Alaska, Second Division.

E. C. ELWOOD,

Plaintiff,

vs.

JOHN H. MUSTARD, SAM J. TAGGART and FRED AYER,

Defendants.

Undertaking.

KNOW ALL MEN BY THESE PRESENTS, That we, John H. Mustard, Sam J. Taggart, and Fred Ayer, as principals, and G. R. Jackson and Andrew Anderson, sureties, are held and firmly bound unto the plaintiff above named, in the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars, to be paid to the said plaintiff, his heirs, executors or assigns, the payment of which well and truly to be made, we bind ourselves and each of us, jointly and severally, and our and each of our heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, firmly by these presents.

Sealed with our seals, and dated this 17th day of October, 1914.

The condition of the above undertaking and obligation is,

THAT WHEREAS the above-named defendants John H. Mustard, Sam J. Taggart and Fred Ayer have filed their petition for an appeal to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, to reverse the judgment in the above-entitled action rendered by the District Court for the District of Alaska, Second Division, on the 1st day of June, 1914; [57]

THEREFORE, if the above-named defendants John H. Mustard, Sam J. Taggart and Fred Ayer, shall prosecute the said appeal to effect, and answer all costs and damages if they fail to make good their appeal, and shall pay or cause to be paid to the said plaintiff, his heirs, administrators and assigns, all damages which he shall suffer by reason of said appeal if the same should be wrongful or without sufficient cause; then this obligation to be void, otherwise to remain in full force and effect.

JOHN H. MUSTARD,
SAM J. TAGGART,
FRED AYER,

Citation [on Appeal (Original)].

United States of America,

District of Alaska,—ss.

The President of the United States of America, to E. C. Elwood, Plaintiff, Greeting:

You are hereby cited and admonished to be and appear at the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, to be held at the City of San Francisco, in the State of California, within thirty days from the date of this citation, to wit; on the 16th day of November, 1914, pursuant to an order allowing appeal, entered in the office of the Clerk of the United States District Court for the District of Alaska, Second Division, from the final judgment and decree filed and entered therein on the 1st day of June 1914, in that certain suit wherein you, the said E. C. Elwood was plaintiff, and John H. Mustard, Sam J. Taggart and Fred Ayer were defendants, to show cause, if any there be, why the said final judgment and decree rendered against said defendants, in said order allowing appeal mentioned, should not be corrected and why speedy justice should [65] not be done to the parties in that behalf.

WITNESS the Honorable EDWARD D. WHITE, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States of America, this 17th day of October, 1914.

J. R. TUCKER,
District Judge.

Attest my hand and seal of the United States District Court, for the District of Alaska, Second Division, at the Clerk's office at Nome, Alaska, this 17th day of October, 1914.

[Seal] G. A. ADAMS,
Clerk of the United States District Court, for the District of Alaska, Second Division.

Service of the above and foregoing Citation is hereby acknowledged by receipt of Copy, this 17th day of October, 1914.

J. F. HOBBS,
Attorney for Plaintiff. [66]
